

The Man Who Might Have Been NfS 130 – Track 6

A great ANZAC anthem by DOUG MCINTYRE

“The Man Who Might Have Been” is a highly emotive ANZAC ANTHEM honouring Doug’s great uncle who “traded a plough for a rifle” and died serving in the 4th Light Horse in Palestine, in the First World War. The song pays tribute to all the diggers and forms an unmistakable link with today’s generation.

We will remember them...Lest We Forget

“If story telling is indeed an essential part of country music, then DOUG MCINTYRE has all the right credentials to be ranked amongst our finest song writers”

DOUG’S DEBUT ALBUM Turn the Tide

There is something refreshingly unique and at the same time familiar about Doug’s songs—proudly about this country, mindful of the past, yet anchored in the present.

On his debut album *Turn the Tide (produced by Bill Chambers & Roger Corbett) the 2009 TSA Award Best New Songwriter Nominee & CMAA College of Country Music graduate tells real stories, drawing inspiration from his childhood in the NSW Riverina and working as a paramedic in country NSW. With a great voice that is unmistakably Australian, Doug covers diverse topics and is becoming known as a great chronicler of life in the bush
